01 / PLAN + PREPARE

SDR/BDR Daily Operating Checklist

Start with the follow-ups you owe. Choose accounts for a real reason. Leave every conversation with an accurate record and a clear next step.

For sales and business development representatives. Adapt this workflow to your team's territory, qualification criteria, approved channels, and local rules.

Date + time zone

Territory or practice scenario

1. Clear the important follow-ups first

- [ ] Open the CRM and calendar. Review replies, overdue tasks, promised callbacks, inbound requests, and today's meetings. Handle urgent changes and use your team's response-time rules.
- [ ] Check ownership and contact restrictions. Review past notes, active opportunities, current customers, duplicates, and opt-outs before adding anyone to today's list.

Follow-up I owe today + due time

2. Pick accounts using fit and evidence

- [ ] Confirm fit. Check industry, company size, relevant role, and the problem your product can help solve. Mark missing information as unknown.
- [ ] Write the reason. Record a relevant change with its source and date. A hiring post or funding event is a clue, not proof of need. Strong fit can still matter without a new signal.

Priority account + fit + reason/source

3. Prepare the block before outreach

- [ ] Set a realistic block. Choose a start/end time and approved channel. Use the prospect's local time and your team's contact rules; separate research from execution.
- [ ] Prepare, then review. Verify the person and facts. Draft a short opener, two questions, and a clear ask. Check each email for truthful claims, approved footer, and opt-out method.

Block time + channel + first account

> Job seeker? Use a fictional company and a partner for a role-play. Label notes and metrics “practice.” Do not contact real prospects or claim simulated work as job experience.

02 / EXECUTE + LEARN

Make the next step clear.

4. Listen, log, and respect the answer

- [ ] Use the conversation. Ask about the current process, problem, impact, and timing. Listen for what the person actually says. Separate their words from your hypothesis.
- [ ] Log the real outcome. Use the team's CRM labels: no answer, connected, wrong person, not now, not a fit, or meeting booked. Record the next action, owner, and date. No answer does not mean not interested.
- [ ] Honor opt-outs. Record and route them immediately through the approved process. Stop further outreach within the request's scope. Do not switch channels to evade a refusal.

5. Hand off a qualified meeting

- [ ] Check the agreed criteria. Confirm fit and what the prospect wants to discuss. Record unknowns honestly; a calendar booking alone does not establish qualification.
- [ ] Confirm the logistics. Agree on purpose, attendees, date, time zone, and meeting link. Share the invite and relevant context with the account executive (AE) using your team's process.

Handoff: buyer + problem in their words + why meet now

Open questions + AE/owner + agreed next step/date

---

6. Close the day and improve one thing

- [ ] Finish the record. Update tasks and next dates, handle meeting changes, and prepare tomorrow's first account. Keep customer data in approved systems; use only company-approved AI tools.
- [ ] Review quality as well as volume. Compare outcomes with your team's definitions and goals. Discuss a useful conversation, recurring objection, or missed step with your manager.

Attempts (by channel)	Live conversations	Meaningful replies

Meetings booked today	Meetings held today	Qualified / AE accepted

Use CRM definitions. These counts overlap: do not add them into a total. Booked and held today may be different meetings. For conversion rates, use the same cohort and period; no denominator means N/A.

One lesson + one change for tomorrow

Further reading: Salesforce: the SDR role · FTC: U.S. commercial email rules.
Original practice aid, not legal advice. Follow local requirements and your team's policy. More practice: outflow.academy/resources.